David Cameron the Prime Minister has just begun his two-day tour of India to drive trade from India into the UK. His aim is to encourage India to do more business with Britain as he seeks new sources of economic growth.

"I want to take the relationship between India and Britain to the next level. I want to make it stronger, wider and deeper."

David Cameron, PM

Mr Cameron met India's Trade Minister Anand Sharma at Downing Street in June

India, a former British colony, belongs to the "BRIC" group of rapidly growing emerging economies along with China, Brazil and Russia. The UK government regards India as a vital regional and economic partner in the drive to boost exports and investment. The Prime Minister said that 90,000 people were employed in the UK by Indian firms, and many more because of the activities of British firms in India.

So if you would like some more information on our audiences which include all the BRIC nations as well as many others; please contact us on 020 7125 0007
